CLOZING EN INGLÉS

Ejercicio 6

Texto adaptado del discurso: Remarks at Human Rights Day Event, António Guterres

I am very _____ to be with you today to begin a year-long celebration of the Universal Declaration of _____ Rights. Over seven decades, this mighty document has helped to profoundly change our _____. It establishes the equality and dignity of every human _____. It stipulates that every government has a duty to enable all _____ to enjoy their inalienable rights and freedoms. And it establishes that these _____ are universal. Wherever we live, whatever our circumstances or our place in society, our gender or sexual _____, our race or religion or belief, we are all equal in human _____ and in dignity.

Have we, through our actions and our advocacy, advanced respect for human dignity, equality and rights? Have we created equitable _____ inclusive societies, based on justice and fair opportunities and services for _____? _____ we advanced freedom from want and fear?

As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights enters its 70th _____, we can take stock of some of the achievements it has enabled. Over seven _____, humanity has achieved considerable _____.

People around the _____ have gained progressively greater freedoms and equality. They have been empowered to oppose discrimination, fight for protections, and gain greater access to justice, health, education and development opportunities. Conditions of profound economic misery and exploitation have been improved. Women's ____ have advanced, along with the ____ of the child, the ____ of victims of racial and religious discrimination, the ____ of people with disabilities and a multitude of economic, social and cultural _____. Oppressive dictatorships have been replaced ____ participatory systems of governance. Perpetrators of horrific human rights violations – including sexual violence and genocide – have been prosecuted by international tribunals.

So, there is ____ to celebrate, and many to thank. We have to ____ a generation of world leaders, who emerged from a world war convinced that only justice would build peace among and within nations.

But as well as celebrating, we must also take stock of where we have fallen short. In practice, recognition of the inherent dignity and equal rights of human beings is still ____ from universal. Millions of people _____ to suffer human rights violations and abuses _____ the world.
